After the usual dorsal mug-shots (above)...you'll find the right and left lateral images below...

...and a frontal one (concentrating on the cephalon) on the following page.

And it's here that the mind wanders (or wonders)...because I cannot find a possible match in my images-database (which, true enough, is far from as complete as I would wish it to be). Somehow however, the shape of the cephalon reminds me of a dalmanitid...I wonder whether that's an appropriate identification.

Help in identifying this mystery piece would be greatly appreciated.
